

Poem #4

“Invictus” by William Ernest Henley

Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the Pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be
For my unconquerable soul.

In the fell clutch of circumstance
I have not winced nor cried aloud,
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody, but unbowed.

Beyond this place of wrath and tears
Looms but the horror of the shade,
And yet the menace of the years
Finds, and shall find me, unafraid.

It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishments the scroll,
I am the master of my fate:
I am the captain of my soul.

At age 12 Henley was diagnosed with tubercular arthritis that necessitated the amputation of one of his legs just below the knee. As he healed in the infirmary, Henley began to write poems, including “Invictus.” The poem has received more positive publicity with the introduction of the Invictus Games, an international sporting event for wounded, injured, and sick service personnel.

Taking it apart

"Invictus" is Latin for "unconquered."

"Pit" here means hell or darkest night.

"Invictus" by William Ernest Henley

Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the Pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be
For my unconquerable soul.

No matter how dark it gets, he is still in charge of himself.

"Fell" means to knock down, like felling a tree, but it can also mean of a cruel nature.

In the fell clutch of circumstance
I have not winced nor cried aloud,
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody, but unbowed.

To "bludgeon" is to beat. So he is saying that even though he's been harshly treated by fate, he is still standing proud.

He says here that even though what awaits him after this life is death, he is still brave.

Beyond this place of wrath and tears
Looms but the horror of the shade,
And yet the menace of the years
Finds, and shall find me, unafraid.

"Shade" here refers to the darkness of death.

This is a biblical allusion to the saying, "Strait is the gate and narrow the way that leads to eternal life." (Matthew 7:14)

It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishments the scroll,
I am the master of my fate:
I am the captain of my soul.

"Strait" means narrow, tight, difficult.

The scroll is a metaphor for the law.

When he says "captain of my soul," he makes an image of his life as a ship, and he's the one sailing it.
